2 Girls Held by Police

May Fortier Was Driving Death Car, With Aid of Coleman

The inquest on the body of Richard Slater was opened at 2 o'clock, this afternoon in Connelly and McKelvey's undertaking parlour, 1001 Ave. E. A. Matthews, coroner, presided. The jury was composed of after viewing the body seemed to impact the scene of the accident.

Charges of manslaughter may be laid against Sam Coleman, colored, and Virginia May Fortier, white, in connection with the death of Richard Slater, police informed today. No official action will be taken now, until after the inquest which opened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Slater was killed in an automobile accident on the High Level bridge early Thursday morning. He was 21 years old, and was a student at the University of Alberta. He was driving a 1925 Buick when the accident occurred.

The girls were arrested late Thursday afternoon after they had fled from the wreck. Coleman and Fortier were both charged with manslaughter.

After Coleman had vigorously denied that there were any girls in the auto, and said that Slater was driving the death car, he finally broke down and "came clean" when police showed him pictures taken from the scene of the accident.

The Fortier girl, while corroborating the main features of Coleman's story, also said that Slater was driving the death car, and that she was in the car with him at the time of the accident.

RAG-TAG AUTOS PUBLIC MENACE THINKS COURT

"The public have to take desperate chances with $65 cars—such as these running about the streets," commented Magistrate Primrose Thursday morning when he remanded Alfred Geesling, alias Walter Smith, for trial on a charge of willful misconduct in driving a car. Bail was fixed at a personal bond.

Evidence was given in the case that Goeling had purchased an old single seat car for $65 and that it was in a dilapidated condition on the night when he struck Mrs. May.

Stuffed Head of Mad Myrtle May Adorn Cranbrook Depot

Plan to Send Trophy to University May Be Changed

Exclusive in Bulletin

Cranbrook, Sept. 16.—Cranbrook C.P.R. railway depot may shortly boast the stuffed head and fore feet of an elephant as the souvenir of an exciting 48-day elephant hunt in the mountains of British Columbia, the first of its kind ever staged on the North American continent since the days of the mastodon.

The head of Myrtle, the second last animal of the Sells-Floto circus here to be captured following their sensational stampede into the bush, has been brought in on an Indian pack train.

A sale up over charges, however, seems likely to see the head remaining here, and if so it will be mounted and placed in the depot as a memento of the time when running wild elephants in train were operating out of Cranbrook carrying "elephant warnings" and requests to keep a sharp look-out for pachyderms routing up the right-of-way.

Alberta's Representation.

If the returns from the late Provincial election left anybody in doubt that the U. F. A. party is still the dominating factor in politics in this province, the returns from the Federal election of Tuesday ought to clear that uncertainty.

Of 12 U. F. A. candidates nominated, 11 were elected. Outside ridings including the cities of Edmonton, Calgary, and Medicine Hat, no candidates came out as U. F. A. nominees got a seat.

Alberta's delegation to the new parliament will consist of 11 U. F. A. members, 3 Liberals, 3 Labor representatives, and 1 Conservative.

Any party which can capture 100 per cent of the rural seats in this Province, and elect more than 90 per cent of the candidates it puts in the field, is entitled to be recognized as the biggest political element in the community.

In responding to their members, it is therefore with the U. F. A. members that the responsibility will rest of representing the views of Alberta people at Ottawa, and of deciding how and for what Alberta's voting power in Parliament shall be used.

These members will go to Ottawa forbidden to amalgamate with any other party, but with permission to act with any in the support of measures having their approval. It is apparently left to individual judgment when they shall cooperate with how far, and for what purpose.

Make It $5000.

For a week the Edmonton city council and the Provincial Government have been offering $1500 reward to any person who would supply information leading to the capture of the parties responsible for the bombing of two city houses in the past month. So far as known, without result.

The $500 offered by the city has now been withdrawn, and the $1000 offered by the Government stands as the only inducement held out to those who may be in possession of the required information. As the larger sum failed to be sufficiently attractive, the smaller sum is hardly likely to meet the situation.

It is to be supposed the withdrawal of the city's reward means that the case is now being left to be dealt with by the Provincial authorities, otherwise the action is not comprehensible.

The lapse of so much time without result secured, would seem to show conclusively that the amount of the inducement held out has been too small, and ought to be substantially increased. If it were made $5000 the reward would not be out of proportion to the gravity of the crime, and the chance of finding the criminal would be very much bettered.

In a case of the kind there is little use of offering a reward which would not be large enough to take the interest of the search of the hands of those whom his testimony would put within the clutches of the law. A reward of $5000 would take him to the other side of the world. It is doubtful if anyone having the required information will risk his life by "peaching" for any less sum.

Ontario Head From

Ontario sent fifteen fewer Conservative members to the new Parliament than sat in the last House of Commons.

That is the response to Mr. Meighen's appeal from the province which always supplies the big battalion of the Conservative forces in Parliament, and which on the eve of the election the party strategists voted on to send 67 of its candidates to Ottawa.

Had Ontario come as it did a year ago the Meighen Government would count only 106 supporters in the new Parliament, against 115 Liberals and Liberal-Progressives. The Government therefore was beaten outside Ontario.

But the "slump" in his support in that province turned defeat into a rout, and leaves Mr. Meighen with a total of 91 Parliamentary supporters against 130 Liberals and Liberal-Progressives.

The significance of that is not 60 much in the figures as in the trend of opinion indicated by the fact that there was a "slump" at all, and a very decisive one.

Necessarily Mr. Meighen based his campaign on the idea that he must hold his Ontario support. If he lost there heavily he must lose everywhere. He found his program accordingly, and conducted his campaign with all that important fact in mind.

Liberals only expected 19 seats in Ontario. They got 25. The Government expected 67. It got 53.

These figures speak for themselves. They constitute a plain statement of the fact that the electors of that province for the Government which supposed it had laid its plans and shaped its program first and foremost to hold their support.

It is in order for people elsewhere in Canada to revise the somewhat prevalent notion that Ontario is a province where the electors are hopelessly enamoured of the false gods of protection, and where at election time "anything goes" that is dish up to the accompaniment of flag-waving.

Twenty-five Ontario constituencies sent members to Ottawa to ask for more Robt budgets; fifteen of them an avowedly former high tariff representatives to do so.

That is a fact which the Mackenzie King government, the Liberal party, and people else where in Canada may contemplate in future with profit.

Men and Grass

By EDGAR A. GUEST

Some blades of grass are tall,
Some rich with green,
Some seem so very small,
Some harsh and mean.

Stand close and you may see
The patches of despair;
The difference in degree
Of wealth that's there.

Stand off at dusk or dawn
And every blade is tall,
Blends to a velvet lawn
That life has made.

The cutter comes and mows
The rich blade and the tall,
No favors he knows
No levels one and all.

So with the world of men,
Stand close and shame we see,
The difference in degree
The difference in degree.

But from the distance viewed,
Even as leaves green and gold,
The great, the low, the rude
A lovely grass may grow.

And death, the cutter, mows
All the great and small,
No favors he knows
No levels one and all.

Do Men Prefer Blondes?

By DR. FRANK CRANE

Antia Loe's book has brought the preference of gentlemen for blonds into discussion all over the country.

Notwithstanding the matter around when he described a large butter-cream man some into a New York hotel and saying to the waitress girl: "Hello, Cate, you look pretty good to me. May I take you out to lunch?" "Well," she said, "you see, blonde prefer brunettes."

The writer in the London Mail seriously challenges the statement about gentleness and blondes. He says that as a matter of fact brunettes have the advantage.

An English doctor many times ago collected statistics to the effect that from among nearly one thousand women 75 per cent of the day were married and married only 25 per cent of the day were married.

The old English word "fair" meant beautiful, and it is interesting to observe that "fair" women may be actually darker.

British ladies were never studied by the Moore. Although the Greeks and Romans admired fair-haired women, the modern ladies moderns have been brunettes.

The writer in the Mail declares that Lady Vivian Stanley, who married Sir Kenneth Stirling, had brown hair and eyes, and that her husband was a great admirer of blonde women in her time, was dark.

Maudslays so admired dark women that he felt in his mind to marry a blonde.

All of Thackeray's heroines were brunettes. Brunettes have never studied by the Moore. And the number of fair people in Europe is stated to be rapidly diminishing.

After history does not seem to bear out the statement that "gentlemen prefer blondes."

Health and Diet Advice

ROASTED PEANUTS GOOD FOR REGULAR FOOD

The peanut is really a legume and not a nut. It is one of the class of legumes which bury their pods in the earth to ripen instead of raising them in the air. It is a native of tropical America, but is also grown extensively in the southern part of the United States, and even as far north as Virginia, where it is produced in the largest in the United States. Over thirty million bushels of peanuts are sold each year in the United States alone.

The use of the peanut as a food started about the time of the Civil War, when the Northern soldiers found it growing wild in the South and learned that it made good food. Most people do not consider the peanut a food, but rather a delicacy, similar to confections, to be used on circus days or holidays.

The raw peanut contains such a combination of starch, protein and fat that it is a very hearty food and difficult to digest, but when it is roasted the starch is converted into dextrose and it is then quite easily digested.

A very large amount of protein is found in the peanut, even as high as 40 per cent, also 45 per cent fat.

Peanuts may be purchased already roasted, or they may be roasted in the oven at home, as soon as you experiment to find how much roasting is necessary to properly roast the starch. Most people roast for a long time in the oven, but if the peanuts are too well roasted, the protein is destroyed and the starch is turned into ash.

Roasted butter may also be made at home by simply grinding the roasted peanuts, and always being removed from the nuts. It is necessary to use a good grinder that has a pulverizing attachment.

After this butter is made, the starch in the store often contains a large amount of fat, as you should only purchase your peanut butter with peanuts, and the starch is turned into ash.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE FAITH AND CHERRY LAKE, sisters, are sisterly different.

Faith, tall, womanly, not pretty but rather handsome, stays at home and keeps house for the family of six, because of her mother's ill health, while Cherry, tiny, beautiful, works as a stenographer and is the petted darling of her mother.

Cherry is unscrupulous in her methods with men, whom she seeks for the pure love of conquest, and Faith is continually worried that the girl may bring disgrace upon herself and the whole family. When her father, a carpenter, asks BIRD HATWAY to dinner, hoping to win the friendship of that business man, Faith and Cherry are instantly attracted to him, but he has eyes for no one but Cherry, who whisks him away to a hotel, leaving Faith to steal off the credit for the delicious dinner from CHERRY'S WORKING FAITH.

Chicago Children's Corner Out of Humble Romance

Washervoman Starts Chain Of Charities in Big City

CHICAGO, Sept. 17.—Thousands of people who daily pass by a few squares away from the corner of the "Children's Corner" in Chicago, or the story connected with its founding, the place is Pullerton Avenue and Orchard street just west of Lincoln Park.

Almost the first thing that catches attention in the neighborhood is a "Bambino" above a doorway, the quaint blue and white enamel figure of a baby that John Robbin, centuries back, made the world-wide stretch for children. The "Bambino" figure in this case a Chicago children's hospital, and the place that within half a mile radius a large group of other children's charities have arisen, besides the Hans Christian Andersen statue and a monument to Eugene Field, the poet of "Little Boy Blue".

The history of the Children's Corner begins directly across the street from the hospital "Bambino" where in the vestibule of one of the city's stately churches, St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran, is a memorial to a baby boy, the son of a washerwoman with no other kin.

Telling for years over time, this mother, a widow, achieved finally her life ambition—care enough to place in the splendid church doorway a babying which would tell of her love for her baby boy. Some nearby residents may say that in doing so she effected more than she foresaw, the establishment of the "Children's Corner" of Chicago.

The Keoni club will have a sale of aprons and home cooking at the home of Mrs. Gordon Gray, 1724 173 street, on Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 22. Tea will be served from 3 to 4 p.m.
